Religious liberty was] in its nature an inalienable right... because the opinions of men, depending only upon the evidence contemplated by their minds, cannot follow the dictates of other men.

—James Madison (1751–1836), U.S. president.

"Memorial and Remonstrance against Religious Assessment" (1785).